Even the nation's highest justice official has to fulfill his civic obligations.

U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder was in D.C. Superior Court Tuesday morning with dozens of other District residents called for jury duty.

Holder sat in the last row of Judge Stuart Nash's courtroom along with other prospective jurors as the judge gave details of the criminal case. It involves the robbery of a cell phone at 14th and Park Roads NW.

Holder's three FBI agents waited outside the courtroom.

It was a homecoming of sorts for Holder, who is a former judge in the courthouse.
